Hotel Moody and the Garnier flats were burning.

Firebrands and sparks were picked up by the wind and whirled down Only Fifteen Minutes Are Rethe valley until the conflagration was spread in spots over a district extending for several blocks. Stores packed with inflammable merchandisc burned as readily as frame dwellings or lodging-houses. Duffie's general store, one of the largest in the city, was completely destroyed.

After two hours, when it appeared that the firemen had the blaze under control, the water supply gave out. The whole lower section of Hot Springs was left to the mercy of the flames. From that time until the fire subsided because it had no more to feed upon it was fought by bucket

Thousands of visitors from the big hotels, attracted by the fire, hurried down the valley and got in line with buckets, tubs, washbollers, pitchers and every other receptacle that would hold water. Others assisted merchants and residents in hauling merchandise and furniture to the streets and dragging the stuff up the sides of the mountain out of reach of the

Mr. Moody, when asked if he wished to change his fath, replied in the affirmative, and practically at the same time he was baptized and received the last rites. Mrs. Moody died a Roman Catholic, and that before his death he obtained full pardon for his sins, and was received into membership in the Yord's Church on earth. He had been a Protestant all his life, and I had prayed again and again (oh, so hard) that he would see the truth before it was too late. It is a great comfort to me in my bereavement to know that all is well with my husband, and that he died safe in the true Church. I regard his conversion as a direct answer to my prayers."

There will be no elevated railroad loop in Centre street and across the east edde from Centre and Grand streets to connect the terminals of the Brooklyn and Williamsburg bridges. This much was definitely decided upon to-day at a meeting of the Committee on Plan and Scope of the Rand Transit Commission.

The subjects to be considered by the committee were so diversified that an adjournment was taken until next Tuesday, when plans for the extension of the Subway lines to the Bronx and Kings will be announced.
